About Core Banking

In this dynamic environment, banks are at risk of being unable to meet future business needs due to the complexity driven by outdated technology platforms, inappropriate procedures and duplicate business processes.

By simplifying and industrializing their core banking operations, banks can enable a more sustainable business model—and gain three key aspects of high performance:

- Competitive differentiation.
- Simplified products, processes and systems.
- Mastery of execution and delivery.

Core Banking offers a comprehensive collection of solutions and services for the global banking industry. Through more than 50 successful core banking transformations, we have helped our clients grow revenue and rebuild profitability. We look forward to working with you to help reduce risk, accelerate results and achieve long-lasting benefits. Banks renew focus on global growth, the spotlight is on transaction banking. Operational efficiency and new revenue generation are key considerations for an effective transaction banking strategy.

Transaction banking is becoming a strategic business for many larger banks, either regionally or globally. The business model has proved resilient during the financial crisis as a valuable source of liquidity and revenue. However, transactions are commoditizing and both financial institutions and corporate customers are becoming more demanding. Corporations want simpler, more effective and widespread connectivity to the banking system, with access to value-added services, while financial institutions want scale players as partners to serve their processing, product and geographic needs.

Payments offer solutions in three areas:

- Transaction banking strategy and operating models
- Bank-to-corporate payments connectivity & corporate portals
- Corporate payments and cash management applications

Banks that revitalize their transaction banking capabilities can create competitive differentiation and achieve high performance.
